

Year 10 female students continue to demonstrate higher levels of civic knowledge, and the vast majority of all students indicate increasingly positive attitudes

h numbers of Year 10 students believe that immigrants should be encouraged to keep their cultural beliefs, practices and languages, and think that Australia benefits from having people from many cultures and backgrounds.

Other results showed there were higher levels of trust in some civic institutions, like the police and law courts, than in the media and social media. In general, smaller proportions of Year 10 students expressed trust in civic institutions than Year 6 students.

The report also includes a chapter for teachers about how the Australian Curriculum: Civics and Citizenship, and some aspects of the Australian Curriculum: History can be used to support teaching and learning of the knowledge, understanding and skills that underpin being an active and informed member of the Australian community.

Civics and Citizenship assessment key results:

- ◁ 53 per cent of Year 6 students were at or above the proficient standard. This result is not significantly different from previous NAP
